Interview with Chris Johnson, Chief Executive, Urban Taskforce, to talk about the pros and cons of living in the city. Johnson says the big issue is that suburbs are spreading out in highrise CBD in a very low density which can never support a decent public transport system. He suggests getting more apartments and towers next to railway stations and try solving the increasing population that way. He says people in general like to get into the major centre of the CBD. Johnson mentions that the Commonwealth Bank has a headquarters in the city and they keep the economists in the city. He says a lot of people these days want to be close to activities. Johnson says Parramatta, Liverpool, North Sydney can get up to 40 storeys or so of buildings. He mentions that in the 2011 census, Sydney had 25.8% of the households who are in apartment. He says in 15 or 20 years, Sydney will be a 50-50 city, half suburban houses and half people in apartments
